

THE POPULAR STANDARD DICTIONARY OF THE DAY

Nuttall's Standard Dictionary

Of the English Language

Comprising many Thousands of New Words which Modern Literature, Science and Art have called into existence and Common Usage; with Pronunciations, Etymologies, Definitions, Appendices of Proper Names, Illustrations, etc., etc.

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION Revised, Extended and Improved Throughout by

REV. JAMES WOOD

In large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

" half-Persian morocco, marbled edges, 5s.

" half-Persian morocco, gilt top, with Patent Index, 6s.

" half-calf extra, marbled edges, 7s. 6d.

The Advantages of this Dictionary are:—

- 1st. Its Completeness. It contains 832 pages, with 100,000 References. Full Pronunciations, Etymologies, Definitions, Technical Terms, Illustrations, &c.
- 2nd. Its Handiness of Size and Clearness of Type.
- 3rd. Its Conciseness. Special attention has been given to the Definitions, which are at once clear, concise and adequate.

"Mr. Wood has supplied the derivation of the leading word in every group of words, and as it is printed in italic letter, it is readily referred to. The woodcuts are numerous and graphic. The vocabulary generally has been much expanded, also the classical and foreign phrases, as well as the abbreviations, and everywhere the presence of the revising hand is visible. The result is a volume of remarkable value and utility."—The Globe.

An INVALUABLE WORK of REFERENCE

The Nuttall Encyclopædia

Being a Concise and Comprehensive DICTIONARY of GENERAL KNOWLEDGE

Consisting of Over 16,000 Original and Terse Articles on nearly all Subjects discussed in larger Encyclopædias and specially dealing with such as come under the Categories of

History, Biography, Geography, Literature, Philosophy, Religion, Science and Art

Edited by the REV. JAMES WOOD

It is Issued in Four Styles. Large crown 8vo.

In cloth gilt, strongly bound . . . 3/6

In half-morocco, gilt top, with patent index 6/0

In half-morocco, marbled edges . . . 5/0

In half-calf, extra, marbled edges . . . 7/6

The Distinctive Points of the Work are:—

- 1st. Its Cheapness. The cloth style costs 3s. 6d. for a volume containing 700 pages, with upwards of 16,000 pithy articles.
- 2nd. The Value of its Contents. In a small compass, the gist of information, such as could only be obtained after extensive literary research, is clearly and concisely given.
- 3rd. Its handiness and readiness of Reference.

"The Nuttall Encyclopædia" is a work which can be constantly turned to for information in a concise form on matters of daily intercourse."

PREFACE TO THE ORIGINAL EDITION.

THE "Standard Dictionary," the result of many years' unremitting industry and research, will be found to combine the united labours of the most eminent lexicographers of modern times ; among whom may be mentioned the names of Johnson, Webster, Worcester, Latham, Goodrich, Walker, Craig, Richardson, and Ogilvie. These authors have, both as philologers and orthoëpists, largely contributed towards the improvement and perfectibility of our noble language. It only remained, therefore, for the Editor of the present Dictionary to raise a superstructure on their joint labours that should be found every way worthy of their distinguished pre-eminence, and thus produce a standard work of reference, which, with its numerous emendations and additions, should fully accord with the present advanced state of English literature.

In every dictionary, intended for popular use, there are three essentials which require special attention—Orthography, Orthoëpy, and Definition. The first comprehends the correct spelling and syllabication of words ; the second, their just pronunciation ; and the third, their exact signification and different meanings. To these essentials the Editor has directed especial attention. Dr. Webster and his American copyists attempted to introduce some orthographical novelties into the language ; but as they are entirely opposed to the recognised usage of our country, they have been altogether rejected, and the general system of our best writers adopted. In pronunciation, Worcester, Webster, and Goodrich have adopted a plan of orthoëpical notation which often obscures the orthography ; while Craig, on the contrary, follows the phonetic principle of simply re-spelling each word as it ought to be pronounced, and, at the same time, showing its true accentuation and proper syllabic divisions. This plan, which from its simplicity and intelligibility claims a preference over every other, has been adopted in the present edition.

A clear and comprehensive definition of words is a most essential and important feature in all dictionaries ; and to this the most especial attention has been devoted,—first, as a rule, by giving the simple radical meaning of a word, then its various collateral significations. "The definition of words," says Dr.

Worcester, "is regarded as the most important feature of a dictionary; and a word should be so defined as to exhibit the meaning or different meanings in which it is used by good writers." To attain the objects thus briefly noticed has been the direct aim of the Editor. The utmost brevity and conciseness has been kept in view, so that the greatest quantity of matter will be found compressed in the smallest compass; and he has only to hope that he has succeeded fully in doing justice to the three essential points in a dictionary—ORTHOGRAPHY, ORTHOËPY, and DEFINITION—so as to render the "STANDARD DICTIONARY" worthy of its title.

In the Orthography of the "Standard Dictionary" (as just observed) the innovations of the Transatlantic school have been entirely rejected, and the recognised authorities of our own country in the matter followed as more congenial to English taste and English feeling. However, in consulting a dictionary for the right spelling of words, it should be borne in mind that there are many derivatives or grammatical inflections which are there necessarily omitted, as desiring, desirest, desires, desireth, &c., and therefore a few general observations on the orthography or formation of such derivatives may be useful.

It is a general rule in English that when words which end with the silent e receive an augment beginning with a vowel, the e is omitted, as give, giving; sense, sensible; cure, curable; fame, famous, &c. Before fy and ty the e is changed into i, as pure, purity, purify; active, activity. When the silent e is preceded by c or g soft, it is usually retained before able and ous, as peace, peaceable; courage, courageous. The e is also retained before full, less, ly, ment, ness, some, ty, as peaceful, nameless, wisely, excitement, whiteness, wholesome. It is also an established rule that words which end with the vowel e, with the effect of lengthening the sound of a preceding vowel (as in file, write, endure), should drop the e on receiving a termination and becoming a derivative, if that termination begin with a vowel (as er, ed, ing, ance). Thus file—filer, filing, not fileer; endure—enduring, endurance, not endureance.

In cases where the e affects the sound of a preceding consonant, it forms an exception, as in a word with a soft g, or where, in juxtaposition with another e, it forms one long vowel: thus, singe, singeing, see, seeing. Monosyllabic words ending in a single consonant, not preceded by a long vowel, and words of more than one syllable, ending in a single accented consonant, and, of course, not preceded by a long vowel, double the final consonant in all the derivatives which are formed by a termination beginning with a vowel, as fit, fitted, fitteth, fitting; bar, barred, barreth; abet, abetted; compel, compelled.

But for this doubling of the final consonant, the vowel in the accented syllable of the primitive word (that is, the e in abet) would be pronounced wrong in the derivative (abetted, &c.), namely, with its long sound—fited, bared, abeted. Hence the reason why verbs, having the long sound of a vowel, do not double the last consonant, as feared, defiled, bloated.

Words ending in a single consonant, but not having the accent on the last syllable, do not double the final consonant in derivatives, as limit, limited; civil, civility; enter, entered; yet there still remain a small number which do, such as leveller, traveller, rivalling, worshipper. A word ending in ll usually drops one l on becoming part of a compound word, as all, always; fill, fulfil; full, fruitful; till, until. But there are some exceptions to this rule, as recall, refill, uphill. Words ending in y, preceded by a consonant, change the y into i on receiving an augment, as holy, holier; happy, happiness; pity, pitied. Exceptions: before ing, ish, and e, the y is retained, as flying, babyish, for pity's sake; also in dryness, shyly, shyness. When the y is preceded by a vowel it is retained, as boy, boyish; day, days; joy, joyful. Exceptions: gaiety, said, paid, laid.

Next to Orthography, the science of Orthoëpy, as a guide to the rules of pronunciation, is the most important. This term is derived from two Greek words (ὀρθός right, and ἔπω to speak), and comprehends that part of grammar which treats of the euphony of oral sounds. Orthography lays down rules for the right spelling of words, while Orthoëpy teaches how to pronounce them. "The pronunciation of the English language, like that of all living languages," says Dr. Worcester, "is in a great measure arbitrary. It is exposed to the caprices of fashion and taste. It is liable to change from one age to another; and it varies more or less, not only in the different and distantly separated countries in which it is spoken, but also in the different divisions and districts of the same country. No two speakers or orthoëpists, though inhabitants of the same place, would be likely to agree in the pronunciation of all its words. The standard of pronunciation is not the authority of any dictionary, or of any orthoëpist; but it is the present usage of literary and well-bred society. The question may be asked, Where is this standard to be sought, or this usage to be ascertained? To this it may be answered, that London is the great metropolis of English literature, and that it has an incomparably greater influence than any other city in giving law, in relation to style and pronunciation, to the many millions who write and speak the language." Hence it is that English orthoëpists naturally refer to the usage of the best society in London as their safest standard; although, even here, in many words, there is no certain uniformity. Discrepancies are found to exist, and it only remains for the lexicographer or orthoëpist to endeavour to reconcile those discrepancies according to the best of his judgment.

After all, the science of orthoëpy is the surest guide to correct pronunciation; and hence the importance of some acquaintance with it. Its principles are founded on the letters, which consist of vowels and consonants. Letters are the elements into which the words of any language may be analysed, and they form the necessary alphabet of that language. Words are the due combination of letters and syllables, and form distinct and articulate sounds for conveying our ideas to one another; and a good orthoëpical dictionary may be considered as the best and most important medium for attaining a correct knowledge of the principles and practice of good pronunciation. Some acquaintance, however, with the general properties of vowels and consonants may be necessary to the right understanding of orthoëpical science. The distinction between them is great. A vowel sound may be continued at leisure, or it may be terminated either by discontinuing the vocal effort, in which case it is not articulated by any consonant, as in pronouncing the vowel o, or by changing the conformation of the mouth, or relative position of the organs of speech, so that the vowel sound is lost by articulation, as in pronouncing the syllable on.

In the pronunciation of consonants there are many peculiarities. Dr. Crombie, in his "Etymology of the English Language," says that in pronouncing consonants there are five distinguishable positions of the organs. The first is the application of the lips to each other, so as to close the mouth. Thus are formed the consonants p, b, and m. In the second position, the under lip is applied to the fore teeth of the upper jaw, and in this manner we pronounce the consonants f and v. The third position is when the tongue is applied to the fore teeth, and thus we pronounce th. In the fourth position, we apply the fore part of the tongue to the fore part of the palate, and by this application we pronounce the letters t, d, s, z, r, l, n. The fifth position is when the middle part of the tongue is applied to the palate, and thus we pronounce k, the hard sound of g (as in ga), sh, j, and ng. In the first position we have three letters, of which the most simple, and, indeed, the only articulative, being absolutely mute, is p. In the formation of this letter, nothing is required but the sudden closing of the mouth, and stopping the vowel sound. B, though justly considered as a mute, is not a perfect mute. The mouth being kept in the same position, and the breath being emitted through the nostrils, the letter m is produced. In the first position, therefore, we have a perfect mute p, having no audible sound, a labial and liquid consonant m, capable of a continued sound, and, between these two extremes, we have the letter b, somewhat audible, though different from any vocal sound. In the second position we have the letters f and v, neither of which are perfect mutes. The letter f is formed by having the aspiration not altogether interrupted, but emitted forcibly between the fore teeth and the under lip. This is the simple articulation in this position. If to this we join the guttural sound, we shall have the letter v, a letter standing in nearly the same relation to f, as b and m, in the first position, stand to p. Thus we have four distinctions of consonants in our alphabet, namely, of perfect and imperfect consonants, perfect and imperfect mutes. Thus p is a perfect mute, having no sound; b an imperfect mute, having proper sound, but limited; m a perfect consonant, having sound, and continued; f an imperfect consonant, having no sound audible.

In the "Standard Dictionary" it will be seen that the greatest care has been taken to simplify the elements of orthoëpy, and almost entirely to do away with those numerous orthoëpic marks which, in many of our pronouncing dictionaries, appear confusing to the eye, and are difficult to recollect. The object of the Editor, however, has been to spell each word phonetically, or precisely as it would be written if spelt according to sound. The syllabication and accentuation of dissyllables and polysyllables are minutely noted; but figures, prosodial quantities, and arbitrary marks, generally so puzzling to the student, are entirely laid aside; and although it is often difficult to convey the niceties of pronunciation in particular words, yet it will be found, on the whole, that the system adopted yields results as near to accuracy as any combination of letters can be expected to produce. In the endeavour to avoid all superfluous or arbitrary marks of notation, a difficulty presented itself in the different vocal sounds of the letter a. In the long close sound, peculiar to the English, as fa'tal, there could be no difficulty; its broad sound is readily expressed by aw, as in fall (fawl); and the close consonantal sound is clearly indicated by the syllabication and accent, as in an'imal: but the true expression of the open Italian sound could not be indicated without some peculiar mark; and therefore the single and double dotted â and ä were adopted as the simplest orthoëpic marks that could be introduced; as in speakable (speek'äbl), father (fä'ther), &c. Again, in some words there is a soft intermediate sound between u and oo, as in wood, or woman; which is expressed by the short oo, thus marked, wööd, wööm'un; and this pronunciation is quite distinct from that of u in wonder (wun'der), or the oo in womb (wööm).

In distinguishing the long sound of the vowel i, without having recourse to the mark of long quantity (i), as generally adopted by orthoëpists, there was some little difficulty; for the words find, wind, &c., might naturally be pronounced short instead of long; when find would thus become finn'd; and the verb to wind be sounded like wind. To remedy this, the orthoëpic orthography, in perfect agreement with the sound, has been adopted. Thus, we have fin'd instead of finde or fînd, wine'd instead of winde or wînd, mine'd instead of minde or mînd, &c. By this means a long list of mystic characters with which many pronouncing dictionaries are interlarded, is happily avoided.

In connection with orthoëpy, the correct Accentuation of words is an important feature, and to this the Editor has devoted special attention. Accent is the laying of a peculiar stress of the voice on a certain letter or syllable of the word, sometimes on the vowel, and sometimes on the consonant, as in Ma'gi and mag'ic; so that one particular syllable of a word is more fully distinguished than the rest. All the words of the English language, except the monosyllabic ones, have an accented syllable; and most of our polysyllabic words have not only a primary accent, but sometimes a secondary one; but it is only in a few compound words that the secondary accent is noted. It is the general tendency of the language to place the accent on the first syllable of dissyllables, and on the antepenult of polysyllables; but the exceptions to this rule are so numerous, that, in doubtful cases, the best authority is a good Pronouncing Dictionary.

As an appropriate and necessary appendage to a Pronouncing Dictionary, the Editor has annexed some useful articles for explaining the correct pronunciation of Greek, Latin, and Scripture proper names; and also a summary of orthoëpical rules for the true pronunciation of those foreign names which are perpetually occurring in the course of conversation or reading.

The Compound Words are very numerous in the English language, and materially contribute to its copiousness. The great mass of them are omitted in our ordinary dictionaries; but their great importance has induced the Editor to insert all that are presumed to be of general utility.

Phrases, too, are given in connection with the principal word composing them, and definitions especially of verbs as affected by modifying adverbs and prepositions.

ON THE ORIGIN, COMPOSITION, AND DERIVATION OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, which is now spoken over a large section of the globe, and by upwards of 100 millions of its inhabitants, was originally formed from one imported into this country by various small tribes from the north of Germany, who settled in it in the fifth and sixth centuries of the Christian era, the principal of which were the Jutes, the Saxons, and the Angles. These, on invading the country, gradually drove the greater number of the aboriginal inhabitants, who were of Celtic race, westward, and into the mountainous parts of Wales, where their descendants are now located, and where their language is still spoken. Soon after these settlers arrived, the southern part of Britain was, after the chief tribe, called Angleland—i.e., land of the Angles—or England; and the language which they spoke, formed from the amalgamation of their several dialects, was called Anglo-Saxon. This is a branch of the Teutonic group, and claims kinship therefore with the Indo-European family of languages, of which the Teutonic is a member.

At the present time we find four groups of languages spoken in Europe, viz., the Celtic, the Latin, the Slavonic, and the Teutonic. The Celtic languages are Welsh, spoken in Wales, Gaelic in the Highlands of Scotland, Erse in Ireland, Manx in the Isle of Man, and Breton in Brittany. The Latin language is, with various modifications, spoken by the Italians, the Spaniards, the French, and the Portuguese. The Slavonic is spoken by the inhabitants of Russia, Poland, Croatia, and some parts of the Austrian Empire. The other inhabitants of Europe speak the Gothic languages, which are now generally called Teutonic. To the Teutonic belong the German, the Dutch, the Flemish, the Danish, Swedish, and Norwegian, and with these accordingly the English stands in close affinity.

The majority of words in the English language, as now spoken, and all the properly English ones, are from the Anglo-Saxon, and include the more common, homely, and familiar words; as, come, go, can, will, good, see, hear, above, home, bad. The others are, directly or indirectly, mostly from the Latin or the language of the ancient Romans, while the rest are from the Celtic, French, German, and Scandinavian languages, along with the Greek, which supplies the language with nearly all its scientific terms. Latin words were introduced partly by the Romans themselves, but mainly by the clergy of the Romish Church after Christianity was established, and by learned men after the revival of the study of the ancient languages in the 15th and 16th centuries. French words were added by the Normans after the Conquest, and relate to feudalism, law, the church, the chase, and cuisine. The introduction of Greek words connects itself with the rise and extension of scientific discovery. About the beginning of the 17th century, in the reign of James I., our language had already begun to assume the form in which we now find it, and is from that date entitled to be called the English language.

From the time when the Bible was translated into English, and, by being printed, spread among the people; when the Book of Common Prayer was compiled, and, along with the Bible, read to the people in churches; and when great writers, such as Spenser, Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Bacon, and Milton, began to publish their immortal works in the every-day speech of the country, the language may be said to have become fixed; for, although numerous Greek and Latin words have been introduced since then to supply new terms required by the rapid extension of the arts and sciences, the language itself has, in its genius and form, undergone no material change. It is in all essential particulars the same as when it first took shape in the days of Queen Elizabeth and her successor, James.

There are four periods in the history of the English language: (1.) The Anglo-Saxon, or old English, from 450 to 1100, when the vocabulary was Saxon and the words were largely inflected; (2.) The Early English, from 1100 to 1250, when French words began to appear and inflections to disappear or become confused; (3.) The Middle English, from 1250 to 1485, when inflections in many cases disappear altogether, and French, which had been introduced, began to yield to it; (4.) The Modern English, from 1485 to the present time.

ABBREVIATIONS OF THE "PARTS OF SPEECH,"

AND THEIR GRAMMATICAL SIGNIFICATIONS.

THE words that constitute our language are classified under eight different heads, called "Parts of Speech;" and, independently of the articles a, an, and the, consist of the NOUN or SUBSTANTIVE, the ADJECTIVE, the PRONOUN, the VERB, the ADVERB, the PREPOSITION, the CONJUNCTION, and the INTERJECTION; and each word in the Dictionary is referred to one or other of these categories according to its function, thus:—

s.	representing substantive or noun.	adv.	representing adverb.
a.	" adjective.	prep.	" preposition.
pron.	" pronoun.	conj.	" conjunction.
v.	" verb.	int.	" interjection.

As the four first parts of speech vary in inflection or otherwise, these changes are indicated thus:—

s.pl.	representing substantive plural.	pp.	representing past participle.
v.a.	" verb active.	ppr.	" present participle.
v.n.	" verb neuter.	pret.	" preterite.
v.imp.	" verb impersonal.

To one or other of the above Parts of Speech each of the many thousand words of which our language is composed belongs, and the same word may belong to this or that division according to its function in a sentence. Thus, a word is a NOUN or SUBSTANTIVE when it names a thing, whether that be a substance or an abstraction, being called a noun as naming, and a substantive as capable of qualification. An ADJECTIVE (from the Latin adjectum) is a word "added to" a substantive to qualify it in some way, and in general at once amplify its meaning and limit its application. A PRONOUN (from the Latin pro nomine) is a word used "in place of a noun" to avoid its repetition, as well as to indicate certain rhetorical relations or logical connections. The VERB (from the Latin verbum) is "the word" of a sentence, and that which makes the assertion, as well as asks a question or expresses a command, and is here called active when it is transitive, and neuter (i.e. neither active nor passive) when it is not. An ADVERB (from the Latin ad verbum) is a word properly appended "to a verb" to express some modifying circumstance of place, time, manner or cause regarding it, but is also used to qualify attributive words like adjectives as well as verbs. The PREPOSITION (from the Latin prepositum) is a word "placed before" a noun or pronoun to show its relation to some other word in the sentence, and was originally expressive, for most part, of place-relation. The CONJUNCTION (from the Latin conjunctio) is a word used to "join together" sentences or clauses of sentences, and to indicate the relation in which these stand to each other. The INTERJECTION (from the Latin interjectum) is an abrupt exclamation "thrown between" the words of a sentence to express some related emotion on the part of the speaker. On referring to the Dictionary, the student will find many words which are of different parts of speech, and verbs which are both active and neuter, according to the senses in which they are used; but these are all clearly distinguished, and the definitions given accordingly.

NUTTALL'S STANDARD DICTIONARY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

A, a vowel, is the first letter of the alphabet of all the known languages, except the Ethiopic, in which it is the thirteenth, and the Runic, in which it is the tenth. It has, in English, four distinct sounds; the long or slender, as in place, fate, cake; the short, as in cat, china, fancy; the open, or Italian, as in father, cast, glass; and the broad, as in wall, apparel, which is shortened in squad, what.

A, a contraction of the Anglo-Saxon an or anc, is called the indefinite article, implying one, any, some, one, and is used before nouns of the singular number, as a man, a tree. Before a word beginning with a vowel or a silent h, it is, for the sake of euphony, changed into an, as an owl, an heir.

A has many significations in our old writers and in our provincial dialects, of which the following are some: ah, he, they, all, on, have, one, always, yes, even, &c. It has also a peculiar signification, denoting proportion, or each, as a hundred a year, a pound a man. It is also sometimes placed before a participle, as gone a-hunting, come a-begging, the house is a-building.

A, as a prefix to many English words, is equivalent to the prepositions in or on, as in asleep, alive, afoot, aground. A is also a prefix of Latin and Greek words, and means, when prefixed to Latin words, away from, as avert, to turn away from, vert meaning to turn; and when prefixed to Greek words, it means not or without, as atom, what cannot be divided, tom coming from a word meaning to cut.

A, in abbreviations, stands for *artium, anno, ante, &c., as A.M., artium magister, master of arts; A.D., anno Domini, in the year of Our Lord; A.M., ante-meridien, before noon. Among the Romans, A.U.C. stood for anno urbis condite, from the year of the building of the city, or Rome. A, or AA, in pharmacy, are abbreviations of the Greek word ana, signifying of each.*

A in Music is the nominal of the sixth note in the natural diatonic scale, and corresponds to the fa of Guido. It is also the name of one of the two natural notes; and it is the open note of the second string of the violin, by which the other strings are tuned and regulated.

Diadelphia, di-á-del'-fe-á, s. plants whose stamens are united into two bodies or bundles by their filaments [Bot.] (Gr. di, twice, and adelphos, a brother.)

Diadelphian, di-á-del'-fe-an, } a. having stamens united Diadelphous, di-á-del'-fus, } into two bodies by their filaments [Bot.]

Diadem, di'-á-dem, s. anciently a head-band or fillet worn as a badge of royalty; anything worn on the head as a badge of royalty or sovereign dominion; a crown; sovereign power.

Diadem spider, di-á-dem spi'-der, s. the garden spider.

Diadem'd, di'-á-dem'd, a. wearing a diadem.

Diadexis, di-á-deks'-is, s. the transformation of a disease into another [Med.] (Gr. dia, and dexomat, to receive.)

Diadrom, di-á-drom, s. a course or passing; a vibration; the time in which the vibration of a pendulum is performed (Gr. dia, and dromos, running).

Diaeresis, { di-e'-re-sis, { s. the resolution of a diph-Dieresis, { di-e'-re-sis, { thong or syllable into two;
the mark (") placed over two vowels, denoting that they are to be separately pronounced, as aër (Gr. dia, apart, and haíreo, to take).

Diaglyphic, di-á-glyf'-ik, a. sunk into the general surface [Sculpt., Engrav., &c.] (Gr. dia, and glypho, to carve.)

Diagnose, di-ag'-noze, v.a. to construe a disease from its symptoms.

Diagnosis, di-ag'-no'-sis, s. the discrimination of a disease by its distinctive marks [Path.]; brief discriminating description of a plant [Bot.] (Gr. dia, and gnosis, knowledge.)

Diagnostic, di-ag'-nos'-tik, a. distinguishing; indicating the nature of a disease: s. the symptom by which a disease is known or distinguished from others: pl. the study of symptoms.

Dialometer, di-á-gom'-e-ter, s. an electrical apparatus used for the purpose of ascertaining the conducting power of oil, as a means of detecting its adulteration (Gr. diagno, to convey, and meter).

Diagonal, di-ag'-o-nal, a. extending from one angle to an opposite of a quadrilateral or multilateral figure, and dividing it into two: s. right line so drawn (Gr. dia, and gonia, an angle). Diagonally, di-ag'-o-nal-le, ad. in a diagonal direction.

Diagonal scale, di-ag'-o-nal skale, s. a system of lines by which hundredths of units may be laid down or measured.

Diagonous, di-ag'-o-nus, a. having four corners [Bot.]

Diagram, di'-á-gram, s. a drawing for the purpose of demonstrating the properties of any figure, as a square, triangle, circle, &c.; an illustrative drawing or figure; a scale [Mus.]; v. to represent in a diagram (Gr. diá, and grapho, to write).

Diagrammatic, di'-á-gram-mat'-ik, a. represented by diagram.

Diagram, di'-á-graf, s. an instrument used in perspective drawing. See Diagram.

Diagrammatic, di'-á-graf'-ik, a. descriptive.

Diagrammatical, di'-á-graf'-e-kal, a. descriptive.

Diagrammatical, di'-á-graf'-e-kal, spl. the art of design or drawing.

Diagrydiates, di'-á-grid'-e-ates, spl. strong purgatives made with diagrydium, a preparation of scammony and quince-juice.

Diachotropism, di'-á-he-le-ot'-rop-izm, s. tendency to lie at right angles to the light [Bot.] (Gr. helios, the sun, and tropo, to turn).

Dial, di'-al, s. a contrivance for showing the hour of the day by the sun's shadow; the graduated face of a time-piece; anything similar, with a movable index (L. dies, a day).

Dialect, di'-á-lekt, s. the form or idiom of a language peculiar to a district; manner of speaking; speech; language (Gr. dialectus, speech, from diá, and lego, to speak).

Dialectic, di'-á-lek'-tik, a. pertaining to a dialect.

Dialectical, di'-á-lek'-te-kal, a. logical. Dialectically, di'-á-lek'-te-kal-le, ad. in a dialectic manner.

Dialectician, di'-á-lek'-tish'-an, s. a logician; one versed in dialectics.

Dialectics, di'-á-lek'-tik-s, s. the art of reasoning, arguing, or discussing; that branch of logic which teaches the rules and modes of reasoning; the logic of the phenomenal; the logic of thought.

Dialector, di'-á-lek'-tur, s. one learned in dialects.

Dialist, di'-á-list, s. a constructor of dials; one skilled in dialling.

Diallage, di'-al-laje, s. a rhetorical figure by which arguments are placed in various points of view, and then turned to one point [Rhet.]; a dark green or bronze-coloured, laminate mineral, considered a variety of augite [Min.] (Gr. interchange, from diá, and allasso, to change).

Diallogio, di'-al-laj'-ik, a. pertaining to or formed of diallage.

Dieted, di'-et-ed, a., fed by prescribed rules; boarded.

Dietet, di'-et-er, s., one who prescribes rules for eating or prepares food by rules.

Dietic, di-e-tet'-ik, a., pertaining to diet, or to dietetics.

Dietetical, di-e-tet'-e-kal, a., the rules for regulating it.

Dietetics, di-e-tet'-iks, s., the science of diets; rules for diet.

Dietetist, di-e-tet'-ist, s., one versed in dietetics.

Dietine, di'-et-in, s., a subordinate or local diet; a cantonal convention.

Dietist, di'-et-ist, s., a dietetist.

Dietitian, di-e-ti'-shan, s., a dietetist.

Die, the prefix dis.

Diffarreation, di-far-re-a'-shun, s., the parting of a cake, a ceremony among the Romans at the divorce of man and wife (L. dis, and far, split).

Differ, di'-fer, v.n., to be unlike, dissimilar, distinct, or various; to disagree; to be at variance; to strive (L. dis, and fero, to bear).

Difference, di'-fer-ens, s., the state of being unlike or distinct; the quality which distinguishes one thing from another; a contention; the point in dispute; distinction; mark of distinction; the remainder of a sum or quantity after a lesser sum or quantity is subtracted [Math.], the differentia [Logic]; a certain figure added to a coat-of-arms, serving to distinguish one family from another, or to show how distant a younger branch is from the elder or principal branch [Her.]; v.n. to distinguish.

Different, di'-fer-ent, a., distinct; separate; various; unlike. Differently, di'-fer-ent-ly, ad. in a different manner; variously.

Differentia, di'-fer-en'-she-a, s., an essential attribute by which one species is distinguished from another of the same genus, and which, when added on to the generic name, defines the species, as the word "rational" added on to the word "animal" defines man from every other animal [Logic].

Differential, di'-fer-en'-she-al, s., an infinitely small difference between two states of a variable quantity.

Differential, di'-fer-en'-she-al, a., tending to distinguish; social; creating a difference, as differential duties [Comm.]; pertaining to an infinitely small quantity, so small as to be less than any assignable quantity; pertaining to differentials [Math.]. Differential calculus, the method of finding the ratios of the differences of variable magnitudes on the supposition that these differences become infinitely small [Math.]. Differential co-efficient, the ratio of the differential of any function of a variable quantity to the differential of the variable [Math.].

Differential thermometer, a., a thermometer for measuring minute differences of temperature [Physics]. Differential gear, a combination of toothed wheels by which a differential motion is produced [Mech.].

Differential Thermometer, a., a compound screw by which a differential motion is produced [Mech.].

Differentiate, di'-fer-en'-she-ate, v.a. to make different; to distinguish; to assign a separate part to; to distinguish by the differentia; to find the differential of.

Differentiation, di'-fer-en'-she-a'-shun, s., the act of differentiating.

Differingly, di'-fer-ing-ly, ad. in a different manner.
